

Unit 2: Our Five Senses

We use our senses to learn about the world around us. We have five senses. They are sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch.

Sight. We use our eyes to see. We can see colours, shapes, and sizes. We can see if something is near or far. Close your eyes. What do you notice? You cannot see anything. Our eyes help us every day.

Hearing. We use our ears to hear. We can hear music, voices, and sounds in nature. We can hear a dog barking. We can hear rain falling. Some sounds are loud. Some sounds are soft.

Smell. We use our nose to smell. Some things smell nice, like flowers and bread. Some things smell bad, like rubbish. Our sense of smell can warn us about danger, like smoke from a fire.

Taste. We use our tongue to taste. There are four main tastes. Sweet, like sugar. Sour, like a lemon. Salty, like chips. Bitter, like some vegetables. Our sense of taste tells us if food is good to eat.

Touch. We use our skin to feel. We can feel if something is hot or cold. We can feel if something is rough or smooth. We can feel if something is heavy or light. Our hands are very good at feeling.

All five senses work together to help us understand our world. People who cannot use one sense often become stronger in the others.
